Introduction

THIS is a continuation of my attempt to list out the various authors and books mentioned within the Ægypt Tetralogy, specifically Daemonomania, by John Crowley. Fictitious authors and books have been placed in bold typeface for easy identification.

For those that care, this project was originally done in RStudio to make use of their excellent Rmarkdown code and integration abilities, especially those concerned with BibTeX files. Once I finished it there a friend mentioned it would be cool to have as a zine instead of a flat PDF, so I went way down that rabbit-hole before coming back to sanity. Well sort of...I'm using LuaLaTeX because LaTeX wasn't quite robust enough and I'm familiar enough with it. So, after much trial and tribulation what started out as a text file migrated into Markdown, then Rmarkdown and on to LaTeX before finally settling on LuaLaTeX, and from letter size to half-letter zine, and now back to letter, which I'm sure highlights my own inability to commit more than anything else.

Any errors within are entirely my own.

[2] This is mentioned is a musing from Rosie as they arrive at Butterman's Island and she remembers "that a play had nearly been put on, not Shakespeare but old, the one about devils and magic, what was it." I can't help but think about Marlowe's Doctor Faustus here.

[3] The entirety of Helvetius' story is a retelling from his own work, The Golden Calf, Chapter 3. (Helvetius)

[4] This is the treatise that the stranger read where Helvetius had stated some skepticism regarding transmutation.

- Monas Hieroglyphica Ioannis Dee, Londinensis, Ad Maximilianvm, Dei Gratia Romanorvm, Bohemiæ Et Hvngariæ Regem Sapientissimvm — John Dee(Dee)

[5] This might be a stretch to mention as a book mentioned as a whole, but Rosie Mucho is remembering "The Jumblies" when talking to the neurologist about Sam's epilepsy.

[6] There are dozens of versions of this book and there is no real way to determine which was mentioned here, however give that it is 1978 and Rose had it in her room, I went with the 1970 edition.

[7] I believe this to be the "uncle Sam's book...on sexual pathology" as it was compiled prior to the 1930s in Berlin. Conversely, it could easily be a later writing or book by M. Hirshfeld.

[8] Referenced also as Dr. Hájek.

- Ars Auto-Amatoria (Every Man his Own Wife)* — Anonymous(Anonymous)[13]
- Every Woman Her Own Husband — Anonymous
- The Anatomy of Melancholy — Richard Burton(Burton)

[9] Mentioned as being a yellow jacketed Samuel French script edition. This sent me down a rabbit-hole and I was able to find a version of the play by Don Nigro from 1979 from French that could have been what Pierce is referring to in this chapter. However, it is impossible to really know. If it is this version, one substantial change that should be mentioned is that Mephistopheles manifests as a beautiful woman with whom Faust is immediately obsessed with. This draws some interesting parallels between this version of the play and Pierce and Rosie's own relationship.

[10] For more information about the conflict between Bruno and Mordente, and to get a grasp on Bruno's own mathematics please see Paolo Rossini's article "New theories for new instruments" (Rossini)

[11] There isn't an actual 1586 French version of Hypnerotomachia Poliphili. There is, however, a very nice polyglot version from 1600 with appropriate woodcuts as described by Pierce.

[12] The version I chose is from 1979, which is a year too late for Pierce to have, but I couldn't find one published prior although I'm sure one exists.

[13] I found the following article on Crowley's old LiveJournal account referring to this very thing titled "Dismaying, a little". "I learn in the new New York Review of Books that Ezra Pound was influential in getting sections of Joyce's Ulysses published in the American literary journal the Little Review. One of the pieces (for which the issue was suppressed) included one "proposed title" – which I was amazed to see – and research showed me was not far in the finished book, which i read with care long ago – including this passage no doubt – which i thereupon forgot that I had read, except i perhaps had NOT forgot: EVERYMAN HIS OWN WIFE..." (Crowley)

- Giovanni Pico della Mirandola[19]
- Giordano Bruno

Books Mentioned

- Ars Auto-Amatoria (Every Man his Own Wife)* — Anonymous(Anonymous)

[14] I didn't really want to add him, but to be impartial, and since he meets the, admittedly lax, criteria of being named and had something published, I've included him.

[15] This edition seemed an obvious choice for a volume of Rilke to have in your car in 1978.

[16] Blake is not mentioned by name, but instead Pierce quotes the poem, "How Sweet I roam'd from field to field."

[17] This work isn't mentioned especially, but Beau Brachman names a maze "Heimarmene" a Greek deity of personal fate. She is especially prominent in the Pristis Sophia which sets up a complex Gnostic cosmology. This could also have been some of the inspiration for the cosmological discussion that happened at the end of Uxor-15.

[18] Referred to as "Marsilius"

[19] Referred to as Don John Picus

Chapter 4

John Crowley, "Daemonomania", Mors, Chapter 4

"After he had slipped out of Paris, a penniless wandering scholar again, he'd come to Wittenberg, Luther's city; for two years he lectured there, in safety and peace, and gratitude would induce in him a rare humility. I was a man of no name or authority among you, he wrote, dedicating a book to the university faculty."

Authors Mentioned

- Giordano Bruno
- Jacopo Strada

Books Mentioned

- De lampade combinatoria lulliana — Giordano Bruno(Bruno)

[20] Referred to here as "Alcindus of Araby."

[21] I'm unable to find out who this might be, I think it might be either Ambroise Paré or his protege, Jacques Guillemeau. The former wrote a famous codex the strange called "Of Monsters and Marvels" while the later produced an influential early childbirth, "Childbirth, Or the Happy Delivery of Women".

[22] Referred to in the book as simply a "vivdly illustrated English Broadsheet."

- Virgil
- Giuseppe Archimboldo[23]
- Synesius of Cyrene

- De progressu et lampade venatoria logicorum — Giordano Bruno(Bruno)[24]
- Articuli centum et sexaginta adversus huius tempestatis mathematicos atque philosophos — Giordano Bruno(Bruno)

- John Calvin
- Marin Marsenne

Books Mentioned

- Frankenstein — Mary Shelley(Shelley)[27]

[23] OK, I know he isn't an author, but his art is so singular for the 16th century, and he is tied so closely with Rudolf II that it feels wrong not to mention him.

[24] This volume was dedicated to the chancellor of the university in Wittenberg.

[25] Guarnieri not yet confirmed.

[26] Mentioned as Kroll in the book.

[27] Not mentioned in terms of the book itself, but instead of the portmanteau nature of the Monster.

[28] An unknown version spoken of in general terms.

[29] Axel quotes Job 1:21 to Pierce. Originally, I had assumed this to be from a KJV of the Bible. But after thinking about it and comparing the texts of various versions, alongside the fact that Axel is Catholic, I'm fairly confident that this likely came from a Douay–Rheims version.

[30] This is the version that Rosie specifically asks Pierce to bring to the Bible study she has invited him to.

Chapter 14

- Charles Dickens[31]

Books Mentioned

- Childe Roland to the Dark Tower Came — Robert Browning(Browning)[32]

John Crowley, "Daemonomania", Mors, Chapter 14

"The unsleeping pedant within Pierce recognized the Carpocratian heresy: there is no sin for those who are saved. He saw himself too in her scheme, fornicating, not excluded, if he could put up with it, which he couldn't.[a]"

[a] The Carpocrates were so interesting that I included this quote just to point them out. This is from the Wikipedia article, "Carpocratians believed they themselves could transcend the material realm, and therefore were no longer bound by Mosaic law, which was based on the material powers, or by any other morality, which they held was mere human opinion. Irenaeus offers this belief as an explanation of their licentious behaviour." They also pop up in Borges' The Theologians.

[31] "Past the pretend Dickensian bar (Sixpenny's)" I have no idea what this is actually referring to. It could be the Six Jolly Fellowship Porters from Our Mutual Friend. Basically, because I couldn't nail it down, it is down to an author mention.

[32] Pierce just mentions how "he felt like Childe Roland in the wasteland."
`https://www.poetryfoundation.org/poems/1597010/childe-roland-to-the-dark-tower-came`

[33] Pierce simply mentions the "Dis the mighty," the city in Dante that comprises the lower levels of Hell.

- The Real History of the Rosicrucians — A. E.

[34] referred to as "Hainzell or Haincelius."

[35] This might be a stretch to include him as an author, if you think so, I'm sorry.

[36] Crowley mentions in this chapter that Pierce has twelve volumes of Thorndike's series, while back in The Solitudes we learn that Pierce only had four, unnamed, volumes of Thorndike.

Waite(Waite)[37]

- On the Mysteries of the Egyptians —

[37] mentioned as "the Rosicrucian anthologies of A. E. Waite" I'm fairly certain this is the book that is being referred to.

[38] After digging through Crowley's long-dead LiveJournal I found the following post from October 20th, 2009 titled "Noveltoons." "Many responses to the made-up-comics-in-books question... One not noted is in my own Ægypt series—the Gnostic comic 'Little Enosh—Lost among the Worlds,' whose content is drawn directly from Mandean Gnostic writings..." (Crowley)

[39] While this is an actual newspaper that ran from 1860–1931, it wasn't around when Pierce would have been a child for Axel to read it to him.

[40] Mentioned only by inference as Dee returns to England (see block quote).

[41] A mostly accurate quote regarding the death of Dee's nurse, Ann Frank on Sept. 21 1590.

All you that faine philosophers would be,
And night and day in Geber's kitchen broyle.
Wasting the chipps of ancient Hermes' Tree,
Weening to turn them to a precious oyle.
The more you worke the more you loose and spoile;
To you, I say, how learned soever you be.
Go burne your Bookes and come and learne of me.

Ball: Costumes & Sightings

Because of the importance of the ball in this chapter, and for my own furtherance to try and understand it, I'm going to list all of the characters people dressed as below. Fellowes Kraft compares the ball as being, "hardly the Walpurgisnacht that was promised."

> "The all-purged-night; the all-perjurers'-night. The transmuting revels, the night machinery out of which we all come different. Wasn't that the idea? 'Where nothing is but what is not.' What is not yet, or is not any longer."
