Bibliography of Fictional Books 16

Bibliography of Real Books 17

Introduction

This is a continuation of my attempt at listing out the various authors and books mentioned within the second volume of the Ægypt Tetralogy, Love & Sleep, by John Crowley. Fictitious authors and books have been placed in bold typeface for easy identification.

For those that care, this project was originally done in RStudio to make use of their excellent Rmarkdown code and integration abilities, especially those concerned with BibTeX files. Once I finished it there a friend mentioned it would be cool to have as a zine instead of a flat PDF, so I went way down that rabbit-hole before coming back to sanity. Well sort of…I'm using LaTeX because I'm familiar enough with it and it is free and ridiculously powerful. So, after much trial and tribulation what started out as a text file then migrated into Markdown then Rmarkdown is now in LaTeX, and from letter size to half-letter zine, and now back to letter, which I'm sure highlights my own inability to commit more than anything else.

Any errors within are entirely my own.

Books Mentioned

[1]While I could not find a school reader prior to 1952 with this name, I did find one from 1941 called Streets and Roads (Gray).

[2]While Crowley mentions Guns and Ammo as the magazine that his cousin Boyd was reading in 1952, the actual magazine wasn't founded until 1958. Therefore, I've marked it as fictitious.

[3]It has been posited by others that this could have been inspired on Winsor McCay's Little Nemo in Slumberland which ran from 1905 until 1927. The only problem with that being that Pierce recalls getting "the new Little Enosh" while he was a child. This could just be another instance of transplanting one work in time by Crowley, however. After digging through Crowley's long dead LiveJournal I found the following post from October 20th, 2009 titled "Novel Toons." "Many responses to the made-up-comics-in-books question, with many people noting the presence of imagined comics within comics, either created by comic-artist heroes or read by characters ("Fearless Fosdick", thanks for that one). But far fewer comic strips appearing in regular books made of just words. One not noted is in my own Aegypt series – the Gnostic comic "Little Enosh – Lost among the Worlds," whose content is drawn directly from Mandean gnostic writings, with some Sophia matter thrown in. Sometime not long ago there was discussion in the news about the few last remaining Mandean Gnostic communities still in existence." The publication date of 1952 was set later in Daemonomania.

[10]Noted as being a book of ghost stories by Fellowes Kraft.

[11]The bible is used by the pastor at Boney's funeral where Job 1:21 is quoted. As an aside this led to a look into the possible origins of the particular denomination that Boney belonged to, here named "The Danish Brethren." The best I can determine now is that it was a splinter group formed after the first or second schism of the Bible Student Movement in the late 1920s, prior to gaining the name Jehovah's Witnesses.
